GREGO.—The Supreme Court of Appeals granted a writ of error Saturday in the case of Elihu Gregg, now ander senience of death for burning the court house and jail of Preston county. This will give the old man another chance. He is now nearly seventy years of age, and is confined in our jail for the present.

OPERA HOUSE.—Richard Lalor Shield's beautiful tragedy "Evadue," with Miss Mary Anderson in the tile role, filled the Opera House Saturday evening last with as large and appreciative an audience as has been collected in the builsting this season. The play is better adapted to careful reading than to stage representation, and was pretty general confised to library perusal, until Miss Anderson revived it and made it prominent in her repertoire. Nevertheless there is a good deal of dramatic action in its smooth and flowing verse and a wide range of passion and emotion in its principal character, which, in the hands of an actrees like Miss Anderson, can be made effective. That it was made so Saturday evening the rapt attention and unflagging interest of her audience is the best evidence. Her support, as on the previous evening, was fair, and our theatre going public will be glad to welcome the company again whenever they return.

A FATAL JUN.—Early Saturday morning as the passenger train on the C. O. Division of the B. & O. was coming East, and while passing Belmont station, Gaspar Pepple, a German, leaped from the passenger coach, and being hurled under the wheels, was run over and killed.

Pepples was an old man and was going to Barceville, but being asleep when that station was passed was carried by it, and awakening saw that he had been taken past his place of getting off, and attempted to get off with the above result. He had in his coat a letter of directions as to his route.

Show Your Ticker.—In view of the interest manifested in weddings and the lack of interest manifested by some of those who attend them in taking care of church property, the vestry of St. Mathews have revived an old rule, made several years since, and which reads:

"Whenever the church is used for the celebration of evening marriages, no persons shall be admitted except those who present cards of invitation at the door."

Social and Bazare—The ladies of the Fourth Street M. E. Church will hold one of their enjoyable Socials on Thursday evening, the 18th inst. In connection with the Social, they will have on sale a complete stock of fancy articles and dolls, suitable for Christmas presents. The well earned popularity of these Socials will be a sufficient guarantee that the present one will be liberally patronized. Of course the usual excellent 25 cent supper will be spread; and during the course of the evening literary and musical exercises of a superior quality will be given. Keep this event in your mind, especially those who contemplate making purchases for Christmas.

Mr. Hardie is a clear headed Scotchman, an engineer of considerable experience, and evidently understands his business. He says the company he represents has only been in existence about eighteen months, and has not had time to introduce its machinery generally in this country, but that enough has been done to demonstrate its value and efficiency for the purposes for which it is intended. It consists, in brief, of a "plant," or charging apparatus, permanently located at a convenient point on a tram road, and cars arranged with receivers, which receivers, being filled at the "plant," with compressed air, it is claimed serve all the motive purposes of a boiler filled with steam, without the disadvantages of noise, dirt, danger from fire and explosion, and without the necessities of constant attention, frequent renewal of parts and consequent expense which the use of steam entails. It is difficult to furnish any intelligent description of the machinery used without the use of suitable diagrams. The "plant," which varies in cost according to the work it is required to perform is the most expensive portion of it, and minutes would be about $5,000. "You can see that the advantages would be proportioned to the amount of business done upon the road, for a plant which was only used to charge a few cars would cost nearly as much to establish and operate, as one that was kept busy. Once charged, the motor-cars, which cost about $2,500 each, are ready for use, and are controlled by a single lever in the hands of the conductor, who can manage one readily, and ductor, who can mange one readily, and at the same time attend to passengers and fares. The action of the compressed air is similar to that of steam in a locomotive, to this extent. It is let into cylinders and acts on a piston head connected with dri-PERSONAL MENTION.—W. H. As, for example, if a larger crowd were waiting at either terminus than a motor car could accommodate, one of your present cars could be fastened on and hauled out as far as necessary, bringing it back on the return trip. Your cheap coal here gives you an advantage in the matter of operating the "plant," though of course the economy of the system could better be shown where more cars were needed. No higher priced operatives than those now employed, would be needed, and there would be fewer of them. You would have to run slow through the towns but going trial, the machinery to be removed at the expense of the New York company at the end of that time, if found unsatisfactory. The tests of its satisfactoriness to be agreed upon before hand, as for instance, the expense of operating the road under the new arrangement, the ability of the motor cars to surmount grades as established, their capacity to act as motors for other cars, to make the running speed claimed for them, &c., &c.

If these details can be agreed upon it is altogether likely that the trial will be made without further delay.

"If it should prove satisfactory," said one of the Directors, "I believe the road could be extended forthwith from Hornbrook's Park to Elm Grove and made much more beneficial to the public than ever before."
